The 2019 Chardonnay was aged for eight months in new French barriques and comes in at 13.5% alcohol. After the (mostly) fresh whites this issue, this stands out a bit for its new oak, and it's a little jarring. That said, it handles the wood reasonably well, although it does give this a somewhat straightforward feel. It has reasonable concentration and a modest, gentle finish. Drink it on the younger side, but it will hold a few years.
